QUEEN'S OWN CAMERON HIGHLANDERS
OF CANADA

MESSAGES

FROM OUR COMMANDING OFFICER

This booklet contains the names of four hundred and seventeen Camerons who gave their lives on active service. It is sent to the next of kin of these men with the sympathy and gratitude of us who are shortly coming home to Canada. I trust that their memory will never die and that their sacrifice will be a constant reminder that we still have a duty to do our part in winning the peace. The same bravery and spirit exemplified by Camerons on the field of battle are needed if we are to live in a world of understanding and friendship.

AMERSFOORT, HOLLAND

8th September, 1945.

FROM OUR SECOND IN COMMAND

It will be a source of pride to me to remember that it was my privilege to serve with most of the men whose names appear in this booklet. The same spirit of self-sacrifice and devotion, which was displayed in the Dieppe Raid, appeared again and again during the long march from Normandy to our final battlefield at Oldenburg, Germany. Words cannot convey the admiration I feel for the men of this Battalion who have added such glory to the traditions of the Camerons. This booklet is a tribute to them.

Peter Lane (Major).

THE FIGHTING CAMERONS

The Camerons of Canada, 'tis hardy men they be,
Who fought their way from Normandy, up to the Zuider Zee
'Twas our Christening to battle, on that hot, dry summer morn,
When we stormed our first objective, Saint Andre on the Orne
Then Fontenay le Marmion, 'twas the Camerons again,
We broke the tough Caen Bridgehead, which led us to the Seine.
'Twas the beach by Dunkirk, mid coastal guns and sand,
We stormed their concrete hideouts, and fought them hand to hand.
Sternhoven, and Hellfire Corner, we won't forget Brasschaet,
'Twas there upon a crossroad, we had a bloody scrap
On to the Beveland Islands, with rain and leaden skies,
To free the Port of Antwerp, for bringing in supplies
Now way up into Holland, and there we stopped to pause,
We held the Airborne Bridgehead, across the River Maas.
From there on into Germany, we're seaborne for a time,
Down through the Hochwald Forest, along the River Rhine.
From there on up to Oldenburg, tough fighting all the way,
Then the order came, "Cease Fire" and Boy! "That was the Day".
We've licked the SS Troopers, and never did we fear
The Feuhrer's Paratroopers, or the Panzer Grenadiers.
They're proud the-e Cameron Highlanders, and justly so they be.
'Twas a long, hard trail from Normandy, up to the Zuider Zee,
But always we'll remember, that bright, hot summer morn,
When we stormed our first objective, Saint Andre on the Orne.

IN WHICH CAMERONS SERVED

By H/Capt. T. R. Davies, M.C., M.A., B.D.
OUR PADRE

"In France they battered crack Nazi troops at Carpiquet, bloody Caen, Falaise. The First Canadian Army freed the Channel ports of Le Havre, Dieppe, (where hundreds of Canadians fell in 1942) Boulogne, Calais, Ostend, and in the grimmest struggle of all captured the Scheldt estuary to clear shipping into Antwerp. With a toe-hold in Germany itself, the last drive was on."

This was written of the Canadian Army at War. It is our task in these few pages to write of one Regiment's participation, and to trust that the contribution was not inconsiderable.

The Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders of Canada underwent final training in Broome Park in Kent. On the morning of 6th June, 1944, came the grim and thrilling news that the invasion of Hitler's Europe had begun. This was not unexpected, but it brought one question to the fore "How soon do we go over?" There was a month of waiting and preparations. On the 10th June, all personnel were warned for overseas duty. It was not until 3rd July that the actual move began. On that day, under command of Lt.-Col. N.H. Ross, the vehicle party travelled to Tilbury Docks, and the Rifle companies, to Sutton Hall in Sussex, under command of Major J. Runcie, M.C.

The Channel crossing was on the 7th July. It was uneventful, except for the playing of the pipes under direction of Pipe-Major W.J. McLeod. The landing on the Normandy coast was hardly disturbed by the few enemy planes making sporadic raids over the area. The weather was pleasant, and the following days in the vicinity of Gray-sur-Mer seemed more like a picnic than a war. We knew, however, that it was not a picnic for everyone. Not many miles away, the air was filled with the dust, danger and disorder of heavy fighting.

The Camerons were not long in being given a task. On the 12th July, they moved to the Carpiquet Aerodrome to relieve the Queen's Own Rifles. It was a holding role and served to acclimatize the lads to actual battle conditions. The first casualty was L/Cpl. W. Ritchie, who was slightly wounded by enemy shell fire. For a week, the task of patrolling and seeking snipers kept the men occupied, and all became accustomed to shell fire, mortar fire and strafing from low flying enemy aircraft.

On the 18th July, the R.A.F. bombers and our own artillery opened the attack to clear the path to the Orne valley. The following day, the Battalion began its first major attack. The object of this first attack was to seize and hold the town of St Andre-sur-Orne. In spite of heavy mortar and shell fire, which caused casualties in the carrier platoon and made a direct hit on the signals vehicle, the Camerons established themselves in the area of their objective. To hold the positions was not easy. The orchard on the edge of the village has become the temporary burial ground of those who were killed, as the Battalion held grimly to their positions. Lt-Col. N.H. Ross was severely wounded here on the 22nd July, but his leadership and the work of his Regiment were recognized by the award of the D.S.O.

Major J. Ruhcie, M.C., was given command, and was evacuated with wounds during the fighting at Fontenay-le-Marmion. Major W. Ferguson, who had served as Brigade Major, was sent to command. After only a few hours, a direct hit on Battalion Headquarters wounded him so severely that he died within a few hours. Casualties were heavy. Every foot of ground taken was held. On the 12th August, Lt-Col A S. Gregory took command, and led the Battalion through Gouville to Mesnil, on to Clair Tizon, where the Regiment lost heavily in the direct hits on the R.A.P. Capt. H. Marantz, the capable regimental medical officer and several of his men were killed. It had been a bitter period, but Falaise was reached, sealing the pocket, and the dash through France and Belgium was begun.

The Battalion pressed on under the able direction of Lt-Col. Gregory to Orbec, where enemy resistance stiffened and slowed down our advance. The enemy grew bold in this area and counter-attacked with tanks and infantry, but were driven off with heavy losses. It was during one of these counter-attacks that C.S.M. A. Arbour of B Company was killed by a direct hit from a tank gun. He was later awarded the Military Cross for his outstanding work at Fontenay-le-Marmion. On the 25th August, the Battalion moved into Brionne against light opposition. The Unit then moved up to the Seine River, and there met the full fury of the retiring enemy's fire.

Casualties were heavy on both sides, and during the heavy fighting on the 29th, Lt-Col. Gregory was wounded, and Major E.P. Thompson took command of the Unit. The enemy withdrew from the Seine through Rouen, and the Battalion pushed on once more, entering the town of Rouen to the cheers of thousands of happy citizens.

From Rouen, the Unit moved on to the famous port of Dieppe without encountering opposition from the enemy. What a grand feeling prevailed within the Regiment! Just over two years from the day of the ill-fated Dieppe Raid on the 19th August, 1942, the Battalion returns to avenge those who had fallen in the raid, this time driving the Hun before them. On the 3rd September, 1944, Lt.-Col. E.P. Thompson and veterans of the Dieppe raid attended a memorial service held in the cemetery on the outskirts of Dieppe, where the men, who had died in the raid, were buried. After the service, the Battalion took part in the march past General Crerar, Lt.-Gen. Simonds, the Mayor and leaders of the Free French. The massed pipe bands of the Division played the troops past, and it was a very stirring ceremony. This was a very exhilarating day for the C.O., as he had been wounded severely whilst in command of B Company during the raid in 1942, and now he was leading the Regiment back to old battle grounds.

From the well deserved rest at Dieppe, the Battalion moved on to Furnes in Belgium, where the operation, to clear the flying bomb sites and the approaches to the channel ports, was to begin. The approach to La Panne and "bloody" Bray-Dunes will long be remembered by those men who were there. During the intense fighting for Bray-Dunes, Major R.R. Counsell was killed by a mortar bomb, and the Regiment had lost another gallant officer. Major Counsell was later awarded the Military Cross for his outstanding work at Fontenay-le-Marmion. The Battalion was relieved at Bray-Dunes by British Special Service troops, and ordered to proceed to Duffel, near Antwerp, to take part in the clearing of the Scheldt estuary.

The move to Duffel was very pleasant, and cheering civilians lined the route. The Regiment arrived at Duffel and settled down for a few days' rest prior to commencing their part of attacking across the Antwerp-Turnhout canal. On the 22nd September, the Battalion commenced operations against the enemy entrenched on the North bank of the Antwerp-Turnhout Canal. During the following days of sporadic shelling and mortaring across the canal, the Battalion suffered few casualties, but were itching for a good fight. During these few days, patrols were active on both sides, and Lieut. E. Reid of A Company did some spectacular patrol work for which he was later awarded the Military Cross. This gallant young officer was killed during the fighting near Brasschaet.

Eventually a crossing of the canal was effected South of Ryckvorsel, and the Battalion commenced to sweep the North bank of pockets of resistance. Sternhoven, then Camp Brasschaet, where C Company, led by Major W.S. Watt, suffered heavy casualties during an advance to clear a large pocket of enemy, entrenched on the outskirts of the town. This became a static position for a few days, and shelling, mortaring, and heavy machine guns inflicted many casualties on both sides. Many Prisoners of War were taken here, and the M.O., Capt J.R. Scratch, had the unique experience of being awakened in the small hours of the morning by five enemy who wished to surrender. From here the Battalion moved on up the Scheldt towards Woensdrecht and the Zuid Beveland Peninsula. At Woensdrecht, a strong force of Von der Heydt's paratroopers tried to stop the Battalion from entering the Peninsula, and a bloody battle followed. Heavy casualties were suffered by both ourselves and the enemy, but we managed to drive him from Woensdrecht, taking many of the paratroops prisoner.

From Woensdrecht, the Battalion proceeded up the Beveland Peninsula, and the next fight took place at the canal crossing facing the little town of Wemeldinge. Here crack German marines poured a withering fire into the Battalion positions. Two crossings by night were effected by the Battalion under command of Major JJD Gagnon (Lt-Col E P. Thompson was acting Brigade Commander at the time) but were beaten back with heavy casualties. The Acting CO called for air support, and a Typhie shoot on the enemy pillboxes assisted greatly when the third crossing was attempted, and was successful. From Wemeldinge the Unit moved on to Goes, where they were feted by the happy citizens. During our short stay there, the fighting on Beveland and Walcheren ceased, and the Unit had a well deserved rest.

From Goes the Unit moved to Willoebroek, where they rested and reorganized prior to moving to the Nijmegen salient. With ten days' rest behind them, the Unit moved on once more, and this time, to Mook, South of Nijmegen. The move to Mook was by night and was well carried out, and all were pleased when at last on the 10th November, they arrived in Mook.

The winter resort of the Camerons of Canada was near the Maas River, and there were few comforts and not a few unpleasant activities. Regular patrols and small raids into enemy territory served to counteract the threats of the enemy and to keep them aware that the line was being held by men who were alert and wary. During our stay here, Lt.-Col. E P. Thompson was awarded the D.S.O. for his outstanding leadership of the 6th Canadian Infantry Brigade during the Zuid Beveland operation.

It was on the 9th February that the Battalion was relieved of its holding role when units of the 51st Highland Division made the attack on Plasmolen and Middelaar, clearing the enemy from our own front. A few days' holiday for the Regiment in Nijmegen gave the men the privileges of all the entertainment that the centre had to offer. It was a brief period of rest before taking off for the attack in the area South of Cleve.

February 17th was the day when the Camerons crossed over onto German soil. Passing through the South area of the Reichswald Forest, positions were taken up in the Sanatorium area of Bedburg. Difficulties with German civilians were encountered, but there was some compensation for this in the number of pork chops "liberated" for men hungry for fresh meat.

The move Southwards into the area of Louisendorf was made with the aid of "Kangaroos". An attack on the high ground controlling the road South of Calcar cost Lt.-Col E.P. Thompson, D.S.O., his life. He was killed on the 26th February, as he emerged from the Kangaroo in which he had been riding. The swift action and gallantry of Major David Rodgers, in taking command and consolidating the positions taken, brought the award of the D.S.O. The Second in Command, Major R H. Lane, was given temporary command of the Camerons as they began the next task—attacking the enemy defending the Hochwald.

On 2nd March, a limited advance was made into the Hochwald gap. The opposition was strong. Enemy shelling and mortar fire was intense, bringing back memories of St-Andre-sur-Orne to many of the veterans of the Regiment. On the 4th March, the enemy had to retire to cover the defences at Xanten. The Battalion was kept on the aggressive Lt.-Col. A A Kennedy, D.S.O., E.D., was given command of the Unit, and in the week that followed, advances were made beyond Xanten to the village of Birten.

A rest period in Rindern proved very unsatisfactory because of heavy shell fire from across the Rhine. After being harassed for a few days, the Battalion moved into the Reichswald Forest. Here the resourcefulness of the Canadian Camerons displayed itself by the building of palatial slit trenches and log cabins. It was an excellent fortnight rest and preparation for the Rhine crossing.

The Rhine crossing was made via "Blackfriars" bridge, without incident on the 28th March. The following day, our forward company had reached the village of Netterden, where fighting was bitter. An ultimatum sent to the officer in charge of the German garrison brought the surrender of the defenders including 2 officers and 22 N.C.O.'s. Our casualties were not heavy, but considerable mortar fire brought death to our efficient veteran and adjutant, Capt. Tuck Glossop, formerly with the Royal Scots. The Rhine bridgehead was further enlarged by the Camerons when fighting was pushed to the town of Veldhuten. From here, there was the rapid advance along the Western Frontier of Holland to prevent the enemy, trapped in Holland, from escaping. This was not done without opposition, but there was the exhilaration of liberating Dutch towns and villages, until Groningen and Ten Boer were reached.

The last phase of the war for the Camerons of Canada began with the move on the 21st April from Groningen to Wildenhausen in Germany. Major R.H. Lane had temporary command. Opposition was met on the 23rd in the area of Kirchatten. For a week, the Battalion occupied the village, releasing Allied Prisoners of War and probing the area to the North. Here, Lt.-Col. R.L. Rutherford assumed command of the Regiment. Under him, the advance was made toward Oldenburg. The city was entered as the news was received that all the German forces in North West Europe would surrender unconditionally.

In the long march from the beaches of Normandy to the cities of North West Germany, the Camerons of Canada bade a sorrowful farewell to many of their comrades who had fallen on the way. Over 400 officers and men made the supreme sacrifice, and over 1600 were evacuated due to wounds and sickness during the campaign. Many were decorated for gallantry and faithfulness, and many more were brave and true without any recognition except from the few companions who accompanied them. To all of them, we express our gratitude, and find encouragement in knowing that the contribution of the Camerons of Canada, in the liberation of Hitler's Europe, was not inconsiderable.

"THE MARCH OF THE CAMERON MEN"

3 JULY 44-3 MAY 45

A PRAYER

O GOD of infinite compassion, who art the comforter of thy children: Look down in thy tender love and pity, we beseech thee upon thy stricken servants, unto whom this trial has come. In the stillness of our hearts we entreat for them thy sustaining grace. Be thou their stay, their strength, and their shield, that they may be delivered from all bitterness, despair, and doubt, trusting in thee to lighten their darkness, and to bring them out of their distress; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.
